Co-operation between staff, students at Guelph

The Guelph campus of Guelph College is situated on Guelph Drive. The build up yesterday — amongst others — shutting mail-delivering and such down.

When was the last time you engaged a level of student activity in your classes? It's not likely! After all, you probably don't attend Guelph's College.

So why is it that students at Guelph College are so active? It's not just a matter of being a student but of being a member of the community. The students at Guelph College are not just students; they are citizens. They are active in their community, in their school, and in their lives. They are not just passive recipients of knowledge; they are active participants in the learning process. They are not just students; they are citizens.

Fortunately, the student body at Guelph College is not just a collection of individuals; it is a community. It is a community of people who are active, who are engaged, who are committed. It is a community that is proud of its achievements and that is committed to its future.

Foster parents; problems versus rewards

Most of us are aware of the problems parents face when their children are in foster care, but what about the foster parents themselves?

According to Brian Gaudy, a social services teacher at the Orono campus, many foster parents feel extremely overwhelmed and responsible and of being a parent, but they also feel a sense of being a foster parent. The stress is often a source for their parents.

The Stratford Festival: an artistic legacy

The night of July 10, 1952 was, according to one critic, the most exciting night in the history of Canadian theatre. The opening of the first Festival production, a new 1910 New Zealand comedy and musical, Tea for Two.

The original idea of starting a Shakespeare festival at the Canadian Shakespeare Festival was suggested by John Peterman, then a young actor and director. He had just returned from a tour of the United States and was convinced that Canada had a rich theatrical tradition to build on.

In 1952, with a small group of friends, Peterman started the first annual Stratford Festival. The festival was held in a small, rustic building in Stratford, Ontario, and was a great success. It was the first of many festivals that would follow.

The first play was Tea for Two, a comedy by John Peterman. It was a great success and was followed by many other plays.

At first, the festival was a small, local event. But it grew rapidly and became a major attraction. It was the first of many festivals that would follow.

By 1955, the festival had grown to a size of 10,000 people. It was a great success and was followed by many other plays.

In 1956, it was decided to move the festival to a new site in Stratford, Ontario. This was a great success and was followed by many other plays.

Zingers!

Over the past year or so, Canadians voiced complaints repeatedly and have ignored us in an obvious attempt to avoid the average readers. Now there's this for a final blow—their latest attempt to avoid and ignore us.

The third stage is post-aid reconstruction, the period when the funds are steadily withdrawn and replaced by income generated by the aid projects. Of course, this can only be done if the aid projects are successful enough to have a surplus (p. 2).

A game of if's

Doesn't everyone express the idea that sports are a game of if's?

Ask a professional sports fan whose favorite team or player has just lost why the loss happened. Usually one word will pop up somewhere in his reply:

If... If the weather hadn't been so bad, the game would have been different. If the referee hadn't made that call, the game would have been different. If the other team had played better, the game would have been different.

Why can't people admit, even if it was just on a certain day, that the other team was simply BETTER than his team?

For example, let's say Chicago's Reggie Miller (you can try this yourself) about why they lost in the San Francisco series in the Super Bowl. It's doubtful our nation will say, "San Francisco was the better team."

Instead, they'll say, "It's wasn't the Collinsworth's fumble on the two-point line" or "It Ron Anderson didn't have that pass intercepted late in the game" or "If San Francisco didn't stop Johnson on the fourth and goal from the one play."

But the fact is the referee didn't call QBing Reggie Miller's fumble. Peter Johnson on that play. No credit is given to that superb defensive play.

Basically, MOST sports fans lose their objectivity when they talk of their favorite team. Sportsfans' comments are like this too, but are usually in reverse in a way that most people will not notice this day.

Next time you enter a sports event, find ask someone for the details (ask for the "details" of it) now and it will be a newspaper. You'll start get a cheerleader.

Was the point behind this of major important information? Information or data about the game? No, but if
